About me

I'm Steven, a systems engineer and full stack web developer.

I consider myself a person determined to move forward, ready to solve challenges and build my own path, becoming better every day and learning more from my mistakes than from my successes. Since I was a child I have been interested in technology and in addition to my professional career, I am interested in the world of web development, a world where my job is to make imagination come true.

I create user-side pages that adapt to both aesthetics and functionality.

Back-end

I created the server side functionalities such as validations, routing system and API creation.

Database

Logically structured database model to determine how to store, organize and manipulate data.

My profession

I decided to study systems engineering since as a child I was interested in technology more than anything else. At school I did well in physics and mathematics, understanding that I had good logical thinking and I also didn't really like writing and writing long texts. .

Once at university I had to work for a while to pay for my materials, because of this experience I decided to start improving my skills that will help me in my career and I decided to go down the path of web development, currently I am still learning many things both in development as in other fields such as calculus or physics.
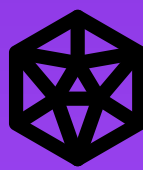

My hobbies

Watch anime

It helps me improve my creativity and explore imaginative stories and worlds.

Play videogames

It helps me relax and have fun, in addition to improving my coordination and problem solving.

Go to gym

I improve my physical condition, increase my energy and reduce stress.
